<input type="checkbox"/> board <input type="checkbox"/> card <input type="checkbox"/> role play <input type="checkbox"/> simulation <input type="checkbox"/> computer <input type="checkbox"/> Serious <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Other: building blocks
Main topic:
Building a coral reef together, but try to position your own species of coral closest to the top
Short description/ Goal of the game:
Every player gets 6 building blocks + 1 coral plant in the same colour. First the players have to cover a bare rock (the starting block) with blocks (= the coral). When that part is finished the main game starts. In turns every player places a block and puts his/her coral plant on a block, which may not be their own colour. After every block is placed, you take a look from above. How many coral do you see of each colour? The player with the most visible coral wins.

Educational value/ Learning Objectives:

Strategic thinking, spatial awareness, building, growing of coral

Recommendations for use:

While the topic is about ecology, this game is also interesting for spatial awareness. You can play it with a group or in solo-modus. The solo-modus is quite a puzzle, so use this own if you want to challenge people. The group-modus is interesting for strategy. If you want to let players talk out loud about their strategies, make teams and let them play in teams.

Tips and Tricks for Facilitators

How to adapt game for different groups, topics, occasions/needs

- Make teams and let participants deliberate in teams where to put a block.
- Play in teams and see how and see what the group dynamics are like: who thinks, who decides, who puts down the block.

Feedback questions

Ask questions about strategies and planning. And if in groups: about the communication.
